THANK YOU TO OUR SUPPORTERS

In the past 15 years, we have helped 69,000 young people develop friendships across intractable ethnic, racial, and religious divides. The power of sport to teach teamwork, respect, and hard work has opened doors that have long been closed - not only for youth, but also for their families, schools and communities. And in the past year alone, PeacePlayers International has trained more than 300 coaches to use sport for conflict resolution in some of the world’s most challenging conflict areas.

But perhaps most importantly, we have seen a change in attitude and beliefs. As participants progress through the program, their opinions of the “other” side are beginning to shift. Recent research from New York University is showing that 96% of veteran participants hold positive attitudes about the “other side” and made outgroup friends through PPI’s programs. And this rigorous multi-year evaluation speaks not only to our own program, but people-to-people approach in general, advancing peace-building efforts beyond PPI.

On the ground, this shift becomes more personal - a Jewish girl in a bomb shelter receives a loving text message from her Arab teammate, a 12-year-old Cypriot convinces his parents to cross a buffer zone to watch him play in a tournament, the son of a Catholic extremist joins a Protestant-based rugby association to help transform Belfast from the inside-out.

Today, thousands of young people are finishing school, returning home from the army, and entering the workplace with a different perspective because, through sport, they were given the opportunity to see their “enemies” as people.

Everyday, the news is discouraging. Descent into conflict is an easy slide while peace building is complex and slow. PeacePlayers is in this for the long-term, and even as the landscape of particular conflicts change, the basic tenets of our work remains the same - if children can learn to get along on a court, they can learn to live as friends and neighbors off it.

We are grateful for your support and look forward to working together so that we may continue to make peace possible.

A staggering 1 in 10 of the world’s children – or more than 230 million – currently live in countries and areas affected by armed conflicts.* Government leaders forge agreements in attempts to make peace, yet these treaties often prove unsustainable because the root causes of conflict are left unaddressed.

*The United Nations Children’s Fund
PeacePlayers International (PPI) uses the game of basketball to unite, educate and inspire young people in divided communities. Based on the simple premise that “children who play together can learn to live together,” PPI is uniting communities through sport.
In Israel and the West Bank, deep social divides continue to undermine generations of peacemaking efforts. With key institutional partners like USAID, PPI has continued to grow despite ongoing violence and political setbacks. In 2015, PPI – Middle East united more than 500 Arab and Jewish youth in the Jerusalem Area, Center Region and North of Israel, while also empowering young women, recognizing the tremendous benefit sport can have for females.
SUCCESS STORY

Professional Israeli basketball player Rebecca Ross hails from a politically right-wing family that lives in a West Bank Settlement. Despite her initial aversion to working with Palestinians, Rebecca recently began coaching one of PPI – Middle East’s mixed Israeli and Palestinian teams. In May, 2015 Rebecca testified to a CNN reporter that her life, and even her family’s lives, have changed as a result of PeacePlayers, and how she is constantly working to make sure that referees treat her Palestinian players equally, even lodging formal complaints to the Israel Basketball Association in cases of discriminatory treatment.

Despite the existence of a formal peace agreement between Catholics and Protestants since 1998, less than 7% of Northern Ireland’s pupils attend integrated schools.* Youth continue to grow up segregated - from the neighborhoods they live in to the sports they play. PPI – Northern Ireland helps thousands of young Catholics and Protestants use sport to challenge sectarianism, prejudice and racism, while developing new friendships. In 2015, PPI’s impact in Belfast was highlighted in a report by The Office of the First and Deputy First Minister, which is already influencing all levels of government as they begin to implement new reconciliation strategies in Northern Ireland.

SUCCESS STORY

“I have worked in PPI’s East Belfast Interface League for three years now. We started with 4 players, but now we have over 40 that attend each week. The change in attitudes and behaviors that I have noticed in such a small period of time is incredible. By continuing to challenge the unwritten rules of society, I truly believe that students new to Belfast will not have to be taught how to tell a Protestant from a Catholic, as it will no longer matter. The troubles in the past will be just that, the past.” – PPI – NI Coach, Cynthia Watters

A small island in the Mediterranean, Cyprus has been physically divided by a UN Buffer Zone since an inter-ethnic war in 1974 split the island into two separate Greek-Cypriot and Turkish-Cypriot communities. Today, many youth grow up without ever meeting anyone from the “other side.” PPI – Cyprus brings together Greek-Cypriot and Turkish-Cypriot youth to play, learn, and build positive relationships that overcome generations of mistrust and formidable physical barriers to interaction.
SUCCESS STORY
When Alexis Georgiou joined PPI, he had never met a Turkish-Cypriot. A graduate of PPI’s Leadership Development Program, Alexis is now performing his mandatory military service. Still he finds time to visit his PPI friends and coaches on the weekends. “As a young person, I would question what the other side thinks of me. School doesn’t really help you with these questions. But through PPI I got over my fears and the stereotypes that we were taught in school. PPI helped me to become friends with [Turkish-Cypriots] without even speaking!”

PPI - South Africa uses basketball to help the young people of KwaZulu-Natal carve out a safe and successful path in a society burdened by the impact of HIV/AIDS, unemployment, drug and alcohol abuse, and strong cultural divides. In 2015, PPI - South Africa served 550 children from 15 primary schools and 8 high schools across the communities of Durban Central, Lamontville, Umlazi, Waterloo and Wentworth.
SUCCESS STORY
Anele Nyadi joined PPI when she was in the 6th grade, participating in basketball and leadership education through high school. Against all odds, Anele was accepted into Medical School and is currently practicing. Although she’s traded in the basketball for a stethoscope, she still looks back at the lessons she gained from PPI as a crucial part of her success. “I’m at a stage where I know Africa needs me and putting on this white lab coat every morning brings me hope that in due time I will be there for Africa. Nothing brings me more joy than that.”

SPORTS AND PEACE INNOVATION NETWORK

PPI’s Sports and Peace Innovation Network (PPI - SPIN) shares PPI’s institutional knowledge with others seeking to harness the power of sport for youth civic engagement, leadership development and conflict transformation. With key partners like adidas and the Laureus Sport for Good Foundation, PPI – SPIN is making social impact accessible to youth sport practitioners around the world.
SUCCESS STORY

In 2015, PPI teamed up with the Kansas City Police Athletic League (KCPAL) to bridge divides between police and the communities they serve. In a 2-day launch event, PPI flew to Kansas City to train police officers in PPI's Conflict Resolution through Sport Curriculum, and lead a basketball clinic for Kansas City youth. One officer said, "PPI showed me that you can bring any walk of life together, find a common ground, and if there is something you can work to accomplish together you can forget about why there was conflict in the first place."
